

ANTHROPOLOGY

Anthropology Minor

Anthropology is the comparative study of human thought, experience, and behavior in all of its complexity and diversity. The anthropological perspective is crucial for navigating an increasingly global world. The Anthropology minor (<http://catalog.uwsuper.edu/undergraduate/academic-departments/social-inquiry/anthropology/anthropology-minor/>) is part of the Anthropology/Sociology Program, housed in the Social Inquiry Department (<https://www.uwsuper.edu/academics/academic-departments/social-inquiry/>). The minor is designed to complement a wide array of majors and is supported by faculty in a range of disciplines.

Programs

- Anthropology Minor

Student Learning Outcomes

- Cultivate awareness and analysis of the role of "culture" as it shapes and is shaped by persons' worldviews, practices, identities, and lived experience in historical, global, and structural context.
- Demonstrate a critical, historically informed understanding of the study of human diversity.
- Use appropriate research methods, including observation and interviews, to study culture and social life.
- Engage with diverse people, perspectives, and practices in an open-minded, empathetic, and self-reflective manner.
- Integrate questions, evidence, and interpretation effectively in written and oral presentations.

Faculty and Staff

Deborah Augsburger, Professor, Anthropology

Contributing Faculty and Academic Staff

Haji Dokhanchi, Professor, Political Science

Cheong Soon Gan, Associate Professor, History

Mollie Greenberg, Assistant Teaching Professor

Daniela Mansbach, Professor, Political Science

Chantal Norrgard, Assistant Professor, First Nation Studies